

Richard Rohr: Trinity, Christ, and Creation

Štěpánka Paluchníková

<https://doi.org/10.14712/00103713.2023.3.5>

Abstract

This article aims to present Richard Rohr's Trinitarian and Christological approach in to the whole of creation. The Trinity as the basic structure of the cosmos is here the principal starting point for a dynamic process of „becoming“. The specific key in this approach is found in the theological meaning of „Christ in all and all.“ Although this Rohr's view of Christ is in many ways controversial, it undoubtedly brings a current challenge to man's self-understanding in his relation-ship to this God-created world.